MSDIS General News

Not much to report from MSDIS this month, but the start of Summer break at Mizzou also signals the return of GEOG 1800 and a new batch of undergrad students for us to lure into the world of GIS. The course has gone through some significant changes over the years, but the goal of introducing students to the basics of geospatial technology remains the same. Unfortunately, since we rebuilt the course to be entirely online, the one facet of the overall experience that has definitely suffered is peer-to-peer interaction. We've tried to mitigate the loss of in-person discussion by requiring participation in online discussion threads that challenge students to apply what they are learning about GIS to hypothetical situations. If you have any ideas for thought experiments that you believe might be valuable to this latest group of students, please feel free to email us. Much like the MSDIS internship, this course is an excellent opportunity to build a bridge between potential GIS professionals and the current Missouri GIS environment.

MSDIS Bicentennial Project

To celebrate Missouri's Bicentennial, Team MSDIS has been working on a small application to highlight all of the important, interesting, scenic, and oddball places around the state. The project is currently under construction and can be found HERE. You'll notice that Team MSDIS has already seeded the project with a few photos, but the goal is to incorporate photos from the entire MSDIS family. Our friends in Mizzou Geography have begun advertising the project to undergrad and graduate students, but we wanted to use this space to invite our MSDIS users to submit their own photos. If you are interested in adding to the collection, and we hope you are, all you need to do is email your photo to msdismail@missouri.edu with the name of the location and a brief, three(ish) sentence description of why the location is important to you. You can send us as many photos as you'd like, though if we end up going over the 200 photo mark, we will have to make some cuts.
